Hi I'm unsure how to write this but basically I see the use of land for gas mining way to risky. This could lead to the single most environmental disaster we will come across. I don't have factual documents ect that stand in a cort of law but we do have a lot of prior warnings from what has happened before. We own a property in the area being looked at for gas drilling and are not happy with our lack of legal rights that the government allow us. I consider myself far from an environmentalist and always welcome more work prospects in the area but draw my line at this. If this goes ahead we could loss our water then what. We fought for years to protect the yarragadee and now the government is allowing gas drilling through it. If the worst case scenario come of this the current government that allowed it will be remembered. The southwest is where the majority of perth come to get away relax why dose the government even consider doing this, the situation is very short sighted and I hope the government will come to its senses befor it's to late.
